AMBROISE LEFURGEY: SELECTED POEMS (PAPERBACK)DOWNLOAD

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Lefurgey was a metaphysical wayfarer, a poet-sage who lived his life on the razor s edge. A walking coincidentia oppositorum, he threw himself full tilt into the Moebius simultaneity of worlds both sacred and profane. Enigmatic and dreamlike, yet not without a recurrent insistence on embodiment, his surreal poems flicker as hot coals do, often flaring between themes of eternity and facticity, body and spirit, love and lovelessness. -Lefurgey s poetry-a light / so bright it blinds my eyes / Alive! / Alive! / Alive! / (I ve died!)- - Daniah Chilcott, director of Le Trident Barattage (from a 1938 critical-creative review first published in VERBANA, the famed Surrealist art journal) -The translation of a poem by February Eglomise had been floating around the island of Montreal during my undergraduate years in that city; it was entitled A Lifebuoy s Merger and had to do with the alchemical process-indeed, it was said to have divulged the great secret of tinctures, and by dint of this many believed the poet to have been a student of Jean-Julien Champagne, a.k.a. Fulcanelli. The original from which A Lifebuoy s Merger had been translated was a document no one could find. It is fitting, then, that a student in anglophone Toronto-at the so-called Divinity School (a.k.a.School of Divining-Rods qua Plumbing-Techniques) of Toronto s Humber College-plumbed the depths of this mystery and discovered that both the name of the poet (February Eglomise) and the name of the poem (A Lifebuoy s Merger) were anagrams of Ambroise Lefurgey (and of course, vice versa). Mike Tulles, Humber College s top-notch student of plumbing-techniques, anagrammatized his name and then published his findings under this...
