Some thirty years ago J. G. Von Hahn attempted to interpret Greek and Teutonic mythology on the basis of naturalistic principles, though affirming an historical connection between them. His fundamental assumption was that the cycle of the seasons, owing to its importance for primitive man's food supply, formed the principal myth-making factor of the outside world, while the succession of day and night, meteorological conditions, and other natural phenomena, have contributed their share. The interpreter's first duty was accordingly to detect...
