Excerpt from The Commercial Independence of Canada: An Address Delivered 26th January, 1883, to the Reform Associations of Centre Toronto, on the Right of Canada to Make Her Own Commercial Treaties In addressing the Liberals of Centre Toronto upon the [commercial Independence of Canada I am introducing no new topic, for during my election campaign as your candidate last summer, I never failed to refer to it in my speeches. Although other issues carried the popular verdict against us, my views upon this point always met the approval of the audiences to whom they were submitted. At an earlier date, when addressing the Yorkville Reform Association about a year ago, I selected that subject as the one, of all questions within the domain of practical politics, which seemed to possess the deepest national interest for Canadians . The proposal that Canada should claim the right to make her own commercial treaties with foreign countries had then been recently met by taunts of veiled treason from the Conservative leader and his organs.
