A plugged oil hole prevents the proper lubrication of the bearing. INDICATING AND ADJUSTING. Upon the condition of the centers, rests to a large degree the accuracy of the work produced. After attention to lubrication the competent workman proceeds to prepare and test the centers. Remove both centers and after cleaning them and the tapered holes note whether they return to their places with a successful fit. The dead or footstock center should have a hardened point to resist wear. The cone-points of the centers should be smooth and an exact sixty degrees. The centers should align with each other in the vertical and horizontal planes, and the live or head-stock cone-point should rotate truly concentric with its axis. The trial and error method of adjusting the centers in alignment is to first bring the cone-points nearly into contact, and by adjusting the foot-stock frame upon its cricket bring them into as exact truth as is reasonably possible. With the foot-stock clamped in position to receive the work, surface the diameter of a trial piece for a length sufficient to allow testing its diameter at several places. If the diameter increases or decreases as the tool passes along the length of the work, readjust the foot-stock and repeat the test until the required degree of accuracy is obtained. To test the live center for concentricity, place in the tool-post a universal testindicator, as shown in Fig. 21, with the feeler in touch with the...
