Miss Sewell's arduous life-work came to an end as she has told in her own words in 1890, and from that year to 1897 she kept up many outside activities, visiting St. Boniface School, attending committees there, visiting the village school, keenly interested in events of the day, reading the Times aloud in the evening or some book of note. She was working at her Outlines of Italian History and paid various visits to London and New College. She took up various pursuits, for which her busy life had left little time to indulge her taste, and I have before me two books of most delicately drawn sketches in sepia showing ability of no mean order, especially noticeable for what artists call values, which she finished during these years, all bearing the marks of great accuracy and truth of detail. Her sympathy was always ready for her friends at their need, so strong, so understanding and withal so tender, that it held untold comfort in its depths. So life went on until the last shock of the sudden death of her sister Emma in 1897 broke down that faithful heart, which had borne so many shocks and sorrows in undaunted trust and endurance; after that her brain became gradually clouded, shown first in lapses of memory as to trivial things and weariness which craved more and more for sleep. It was very wonderful during that time how if...
