General Accounting Office, 2004 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54788967 Subject: Fisheries -- Limited entry licenses -- Economic aspects -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Fishery managers also need to define what constitutes economic viability, which is likely to differ by community because the fishery has different economic significance in each community. Some communities primarily rely on fishing and fishing-related businesses, while others may have a more diverse economic base. Moreover, the balance of industries making up a community's economy may change over time when the area becomes more modernized or a new industry enters. Community representatives have to decide whether to keep their quota, sell it, or lease it to others. If they keep their quota, they also have to decide how to allocate it. Similarly, if they sell or lease their quota, they have to decide how to allocate the proceeds. Unless communities can decide how to allocate quota or the proceeds, the community quota may go unused and thus prevent the community from receiving its benefit. For example, the quota New Zealand's Maori people received from the government in 1992 has not been fully allocated to the Maori tribes, largely because the commission responsible for distributing the quota and the 9 tribes could not agree on the allocation formula. Third, along with these definitional challenges, fishery managers and communities have to consider issues associated with quota transfers. Prohibiting quota sales may not allow fishing communities or businesses to change over time as the fishing industry changes. According to fishery experts we spoke with, rules that prevent change essentially freeze fishing communities at one point in time and may create museum pieces. For example, prohibitions on quota sales...
