After centuries of attempting complete centralization, even in the face of the increased facilities afforded by railway communication, the country is finding out the greater virtues of localization, so well understood by our ancestors; and the object of modern legislation would seem to be to give speedy and cheap relief to suitors in the very presence of their neighbours, so that the administration of such relief may have a valuable effect upon those who might otherwise venture to do wrong unto others. There is a talk, and it will probably be a long one, of establishing throughout the country Courts of First Instance.
