Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .rate case I succeeded in getting into the record a guess as to what the I. C. C. would do, and a proxy friend of mine wrote the I. O. C. complaining of the leak. We have heard about leaks, recently. Laughter. I received a letter from the I. C. C. stating that the thing complained of was similar to what Mark Twain said about his own obituary written by a friend who was misinformed that he was dead, .-- Greatly exaggerated. The accounting officers will generally welcome some such change, and I believe the operating officers will also. While the change would mean slight additional charges to operating expenses, yet the amounts involved will not be large, and it will prevent the necessity of keeping track of the details of innumerable small transactions, and also prevent the carrying into our property account of a lot of little items which will never be written out when they actually disappear from the property. On the other hand, some accounting officers still favor the present rule, and a very prominent accounting officer, who has written much on the subject of railroad accounts, goes so far as to state that if a right of way board fence is constructed with one nail in each board to each post, and if later the fence is gone over and an additional nail put in to each board at each post, the cost of each such additional nail and the application thereof...
