Queen Hatshepsut's Tomb This is a humorous short story about two middle aged conservative librarians who, never smoke, drink alcohol, or swear. An opportunity of a life time has come to them. They get to go to Egypt with a group from their Librarians Associated Union. Both Helen and Gladys are fans of the ancient pharaoh queen Hatshepsut. Believing they are both clairvoyant, they are thrilled with the idea of maybe contacting her. Their husbands are keen on the idea because of the group rates, a real bargain. In the end, both Helen and Gladys get more than they bargained for. Incognito Collision A girl Friday gets more than just her weekly pay. She helps herself to the safe of the art gallery she is working for. With the stolen money she plans to change her life. First thing first she needs to get out of town before her employer finds out the money is gone! She decided the quickest way is to go by air.
