Excerpt from The Academy, Vol. 57: A Weekly Review of Literature and Life; July December, 1899 In this perplexity he determined to attempt to make good the deficiency himself. He wrote The Luck of Roaring Camp. However far short it fell of his ideal and his purpose, he conscientiously believed that he had painted much that he saw, and part of which he was, that his subject and characters were distinctly Californian, as was equally his treatment of them. But an unexpected circumstance here intervened. The publication of the story was objected to by both printer and publisher, virtually for not being in the conventional line of subject, treatment, and morals! The introduction of the abandoned outcast mother, of the foundling Luck, and the language used by the characters, received a serious warning and protest. The writer was obliged to use his right as editor to save his unfortunate contribution from oblivion. When it appeared, at last, he saw with consternation that the printer and publisher had really voiced the local Opinion that the press of California was still strongly dominated by the old conservatism and conventionalism of the East. However, its instantaneous and cordial acceptance as a new departure by the critics of the Eastern States and Europe enabled the writer to follow it with other stories of a like character. More than that, he was gratified to find a disposition on the part of his contributors to shake off their conservative trammels. The term imitators, often used by the critics who, as previously stated, had claimed for the present writer the invention of this kind of literature, could not fairly apply to those who had cut loose from conventional methods,...
