We will now observe the peculiarities of some houses which depart from the normal type. No. 1 has been greatly denuded around, and probably an outer wall has been removed for the sake of the bricks. At first sight it seems as if it might be open chambers with merely a verandah or long eaves around; and this may possibly be the case, as it is only half brick thick, as slight as possible, and was perhaps run up for a temporary house while building a more regular mansion. Only the hall and loggia are regular, and the rest of it seems to be merely for men and stores, without a master s room or other usual features. No. 2 is much simplified from the full type; but yet nearly all the regulation divisions can be seen. No. 3 is irregular...
