Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .etc., we should seldom have a case of the so-called acid intoxication in typhoid fever. Cases of this fulminating type of acetonuria are nearly always due to neglect, to starvation, or to too large a proportion of proteid diet (beef teas, beef extracts, predigested beef, etc.). It should, therefore, be emphasized that the diet in typhoid fever should contain a fair proportion of the carbohydrates in order to avoid a toxic degree of acetonuria. In Pregnancy. The toxæmias of pregnancy have been for the last decade a subject of very peculiar interest, and especially so since modern investigations have practically settled the question of the nature of puerperal eclampsia. The pathology of this alarming disorder has been studied, reviewed and discussed by thousands who were eager to discover and establish a correct view of its real cause. The delicate structures of the body, including the brain,...
