LANGUAGE. Reading. -- Supplementary Second Readers from the School Library. Seaside and Wayside No. 1. Continue the use of phonics as previously outlined. Test the ability to pronounce readily words that pupils have never before seen in print. Teach the use of diacritical marks. Require pupils to memorize choice short selections of prose and poetry, and to recite these both singly and in concert. Question for the thought. Pay attention to expression and position. Natural expression springs directly from the impulse of thought. Have pupils give the substance of the reading lessons in their own language. Have pupils copy selections on paper and on slates, and read them in the class. To prevent drawling, permit the pupil to read the sentence silently before reading aloud. Correct all mistakes in such a way as not to impede the action of thought. Encourage reading from juvenile publications and good story books. Teach pupils to write the names of the days of the week and the months of the year. Also the use of the comma in a series, and in direct address. Write short stories which the pupils have been taught to tell naturally. Dictate sentences and little stories, containing short sentences for pupils to write. NOTES. 1. In the writing of stories (little compositions) require the correct form from the first. 2. Subject at the top of slate or paper, halfway across and underscored. 3. Indentation of first line...
