When my children were very young I would read to them most nights using a well-known tranche of fairy tales as the basis for the stories. All too soon there were no stories left to tell. The only alternative was to create my own stories. To my great surprise the children loved them. One story in particular appealed and after numerous iterations, formed the basis of this particular series of novels. To make the most of this story I would encourage readers to clear their minds of all things possible and try to imagine a most mysterious and wondrous place. The planet was positioned in the slipstream of where two massive galaxies collide; the unimaginable forces at work causing gravity, space and time to behave in the most unbelievable manner, creating the art of the possible from the realms of the impossible. It s within this unique, volatile environment our tale is set; known to astroquants , (intergalactic space travellers to you and me) as the Void Perpetual . The planet is called Noov and Noovians are completely oblivious of their planet s rare position in the Void Perpetual. Indeed they would say their world was the epitome of peace and harmony, with a climate so perfect, the subject of weather is never discussed; there would be no need! Even the most common courteous phrases, such as, Nice day isn t it!, or turned out Nice today, would have no meaning at all on Noov. Anyone viewing Noov from a vantage point deep in space would not share the Noovians idyllic description. For a start, it has two suns around which it orbits; mini black holes abound, enticing anything and everything in...
