THE SLENDER TRAIL

Paperback. Condition: New. 208 pages. When writer Baqir Shameem was in Seattle visiting his son, he met a man from Karachi who had an interesting tale to tell: My wife and I ran a small socks manufacturing unit in the city. One day a man walked into my office asking for a job. I asked him about previous work experience when with a straight face he replied, Killing Shias. He went on to tell me he was out of work because of regulations that made it difficult for him to carry out his job. I was aghast, being a Shia myself. Within a month, I packed up my home and business and left Pakistan. This is one among the stories that inspired Shameem to write his third novel, The Slender Trail, the story of Farid, a Saudi native who after studying in the United States, returns home to start his own construction business. A Bedouin, Farid stays true to the traditions of his tribe but calamity strikes and he falls prey to a system that is vicious and barbaric, as he finds out. Learning about the convoluted message propagated by the countrys educational institutions and clergy and observing the effect his has on the younger generation, Farid seeks to dismantle its source. The Slender Trail presents an extreme case scenario and offers a very drastic solution. But thats the only solution, says Shameem who having spent a few years of his life working in Saudi Arabia, has seen first-hand most of the events mentioned in the book. Previously a Brigadier in the Indian army, he took an early retirement and went to Saudi Arabia where he worked as a consultant with an architectural firm. My perception about the middle-east changed completely after I began working there. My job required that...
