Excerpt from Cyclopaedia of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Vol. 2 of 4: A Practical Treatise on Obstetrics; The Pathology of Pregnancy Measles is of rare occurrence during pregnancy, for only twenty or twenty-five cases at the most can be collected among different authorities. According to Levret, it equals in gravity the other eruptive fevers, and is almost always accompanied by abortions and premature delivery. Grisolle and Cazeaux, on the other hand, Observed two cases in which the pregnancy pursued its course. Bourgeois agrees with Levret. Among fifteen cases Observed by him, he noted eight abortions or premature births of the eight children, five were non-viable (born before seven months) three at the seventh or eighth month. In women who were only between the second and fifth month of pregnancy, the disease pursued its usual course, but it became more severe as the pregnancy was more advanced. The premonitory symptoms of abortion appeared towards the end of the disease; as a rule, delivery did not occur until from one to three days later, and sometimes the disease had terminated. When women were attacked with the disease at the end of pregnancy, premature delivery took place at the outset, accompanied by fever and serious symptoms. The foetus was dead-born, or perished within a few hours or days after birth. The disease pursued its course and the women slowly recovered. In rare instances the, children were born with measles. Bourgeois saw one case, the infant being born fifteen days before full term and living only three days. Gautier collected eleven cases, in six of which the children presented the morbillous eruption. Measles occurring during pregnancy, therefore, may predispose to the death of the foetus and...
