The Effect of Youth Transition and Resource Base on the Labour Market Success of Descendants of Turkish Migrants to Germany

By Christian Holz

GRIN Verlag. Paperback. Condition: New. 192 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.4in. Masters Thesis from the year 2005 in the subject Sociology - Political Sociology, Majorities, Minorities, grade: Distinction, University of Glasgow (Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Applied Social Sciences), 45 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: Based on results from previous empirical studies, which highlighted the relatively disadvantaged situation of descendants of Turkish migrants on the labour market in Germany (compared to descendants of natives and migrants from other countries of origin), this dissertation aims to gain further insights in the underlying reasons for these disadvantages. It aims to do so by first introducing a new concept - called the Resource Base - which is derived from elements of Bourdieu's work on cultural and social capital as well as Coleman's and Becker's notes on human capital and social capital. This concept is then used to investigate potential causes for the disadvantageous labour market positions of descendants of Turkish migrants by focusing on their transitions from school to the labour market and the impact of these transitions on their individual Resource Base, as well as the impact of the Resource Base on labour market success. This investigation employs quantitative methods...
