AE/ of Mankind, by their Reason, must be able to distinguish between Religion and Superstition, otherwise they can never extricate themselves from that Superstition; chance to be educated in; E L I G I O N either does not concern the Majority, as being incapable of forming a Judgment about it; or it must carry such internal Marks of its Truth, as Men of mean Capacity are able to discover; or else notwithstanding the infinite Variety of Religions, All who do not understand the Original Languages their traditional Religions are written in, which is all Mankind, a very few excepted, are alike bound in all Places to pin their Faith on their Priests, and believe in Men, who have an Interest to deceive them; and who have seldom fail'd to do so, when Occasion serves. Can People, if incapable by their Reason to distinguish Truth from Falseness, have any Thing more to plead for the Truth of their Religion, than that they believe it to be the True Religion; because their Priests, who are hired to maintain it, tell them it was a long While ago reveal'd to certain Persons, who, as they, on their Priestly Words, assure them, were too wise to be impos'd on themselves; and too honest to impose on others: /And that no Change could have been made in their Religion in After-times; the Care Men have of their...
