We see computers and computer-based communications as wholly new developments that have no precedents. Yet the technology of communication and information has been evolving for thousands of years. By studying how past changes in communication technology have affected the organizations using these technologies, we can gain insight into the effects of current technological changes on organizations. Such insights should be particularly valuable to a large scale research project on this topic, such as the Management in the 1990 s project undertaken in MIT s Sloan School of Management. The past is not, of course, a perfect model for the future. Changes in technology, whether in the past or the present, occur not in isolation, but simultaneously with other types of changes. Thus we should not expect the past to predict the future. Nevertheless, a study of the effects of past developments in communication technology can certainly illuminate some developments we are seeing today and suggest types of structural effects that may occur under certain conditions. These patterns of structural change can at least provide a useful framework for exploring the effects of current developments.
