

Molasses, Fatback, and Biscuits: A Story about a Rural Carolina Boy, My Father, Henian Edward Newsome (Paperback)

By Douglas Jay Newsome

Zen Philosophy Consultants, LLC, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . This book is about an individual who some might call a Griot who is passing down his story orally as a Griot might, this concept is in his genetic makeup as he happens to be an African American. The subject of this story is Henian Edward Newsome a rural North Carolina boy who was born on the banks of the Chowan River, delivered by a midwife in the families two room home on December 24, 1924. In the community where Henian grew up there was little to no technology. The family had no automobile, no running water, no electricity, no television, no telephone, certainly no computers, no Internet, no email, not texting, no Facebook or Twitter. Henian lived in a small two room home with his mother, father and brother. But the home was full of love and inviting to other family members and friends, indeed the family almost always had boarders living with them at no cost. Compassion and sharing as well as Christian principles guided the lives of the Newsome clan. The clans other core values included; love, education,...
