She s not in a rush to break it, but she wishes everybody would quit making such a fuss about it. Her parents. Her pre-fiance s parents. Him, though he claims it s not a dealbreaker. That small piece of thin skin is not important to her. It s not like she even believes in love. She is ready for marriage, though her accountant nerd pre-fiance underwhelms her. His father is a wealthy businessman. Having worked hard in her parents chop suey joint since a child, Alicia is ready to join the country club set and spend the rest of her life playing tennis and golf, in between having the grandchildren her future in-laws want. After the families finish exchanging letters, they must hire an astrologer to choose an auspicious day for the official engagement celebration. And, after that, a lucky weekend day on which they can hire a suitable hall. Then, at a college party, Alicia meets Bran. He delivers the pizza. She delivers the fried rice and egg rolls. Blonde. White....
